The health and well-being of the population is strongly influenced by socio-economic, environmental and cultural conditions. Disparities in the distribution of these determinants among the population lead to major health inequalities.

In 2016, SDC with the support of the Institute of Development Studies IDS launched a learning trajectory in order to raise awareness, to provide a common and practical understanding of equity and inclusion, and to build up SDC expertise on equity and inclusion in health, allowing it to shape a general framework on the issue.

With this TRaverse we want to take the advantage of welcoming Sir Michael Marmot, a renowned leading and inspiring figure in addressing social and economic determinants of health and health inequities.
